Library Notes.

A novel which should be read by every one interested in the history of the development of our own country, is "The Cattle Baron's Daughter." This is a tale of life in the cattle country at the time when the cattle barons were forced to give up great tracts of grazing lands which they held under lease for many years, because of the incoming of sturdy settlers who acquired these same lands under the homestead laws. It is a stirring tale of life on the plains during a great transition period and is a book of high moral tone.

"The Impresario" is a very clever society novel, the scene of which is laid in Washington, D. C. The story turns on the complications which arise from the impersonation of one Paris artist student by another.

With what delight we take up "The Doctor" by Ralph Connor, knowing the rare humor, the tender sympathy and the strong grip on high things which we shall find in its pages. With what keen regret we lay it down, wishing that it might have been longer. Ralph Connor gives us no sugar coated pills, and his characters are not saints, but there is no writer of this day who can excel him in picturing genuine red, blooded men, and in rousing in us the noblest aspirations by showing us what has been achieved in the plain every day life of men of the Canadian woods. He is a master musician playing on the harp of human emotions, and we laugh or cry at his bidding.

If any one is inclined to court the distinction of a Simian ancestry, he will surely be turned from the error of his ways by some of the illustrations in "Natural History in Zoological Gardens." But there are much prettier pictures in the book than those of the monkeys, and of real interest and value is the reading matter concerning one hundred and seventeen animals usually seen in zoological gardens. The author, Frank E. Beddard, M. A. (Oxon), F. R. S., F. Z. C., etc., is well qualified to treat his subject.

Stanley Weyman's "Chippings Brough" gives a vivid picture of the state of unrest into which the English nation was plunged in the early thirteenth century against the old, progressive, against extreme conservatism, the note of victory rung out in 1833, when the passage of the Reform Bill, the system of representation in Parliament was so altered as to extend the franchise to the middle classes. To the student of history the book is full of interest, though it will probably not be so demanded by the average reader of light fiction.

New York in Olden Time.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CITIZEN:

SIR:—The near approach of the New Year carries me back to the time when New York city made the first of January the liveliest day of the year. I recollect the first call I ever made. When a lad of sixteen I called with a school friend on his mother at their home on Wall street near Broadway, and next door to the First Presbyterian Church (now located on Fifth Avenue). I can see now the little table in one corner of the room, on which was a coffee urn, cups and saucers, crullers and New Year cake. This was about the average feast provided for callers, except among the descendants of the Hollanders, where could be found pretzels, sour bread and schnaps in addition. At this time there were but few families above Spring street. As the city grew in numbers the calling day began to assume more of a festive character. Additions were made to the lunch table, such as cold turkey, ham, oysters (raw and stewed), lobster salad, etc., with every variety of cake. Wine flowed freely, and at many houses champagne became the favorite refreshment. The ladies of different homes appeared to vie with each other to see who could provide the most elaborate table. In the evening those belonging to the different coteries would agree among themselves at which house they were to meet, and during the day invite their gentlemen friends to meet at the appointed place and end the day with song and dance. It was quite customary for three or four young men to engage a carriage together, thus enabling them to complete all their calls easily, and sometimes add to their acquaintance. I am sorry to say that some of them were rather too fond of the wine. It was customary then for the mayor of the city and the collector of the port to receive calls at their own homes between the hours of eleven and one. Of course these receptions were crowded. It was about the year 1840 that I called at the collector's house with a friend. The table was loaded with a variety of all kinds, to which the visitors did ample justice. On looking through the back window there appeared to be some twenty or more baskets of champagne. When some of the visitors left they were evidently having a happy New Year; but when all had left the collector's parlors were in a sad condition. The carpets had to be taken up and new ones substituted. After that there were no more receptions at the collector's house, and from that time the mayor received his visitors at the city hall from twelve to one, and furnished them with coffee and crullers.

New York was growing in population, which needed more territory, and consequently many began to move farther up town, even as far as Harlem. The natural result was that visiting on New Year's day gradually died a lingering death, and they were enjoyable days while they lasted. It appears to me strange that the people of Bloomfield do not, as a yearly custom, make a practice of using that day in renewing old friendships, and bidding cheer those they now have.

New Jersey Needs Skilled Labor.

"If any one feature more than another has characterized the trade papers and periodicals of New Jersey during the present year it is the great number of 'help wanted' advertisements found in their columns," said a manufacturer of Elizabeth. "Every trade in New Jersey has a journal or paper devoted to its interests and no day of them are published in the cities of the metropolitan belt. Formerly the greater amount of space in these papers was devoted to general information relating to these trades, and the papers had large subscription lists because of this feature. During the last two years, however, a great change has come over these publications and the number of 'help wanted' advertisements has been increasing gradually until to-day the majority of these papers are little less than advertising mediums for help. Although those who formerly read these papers for information regret the change, they must admit that this increase in the amount of help wanted is a decidedly favorable sign and indicates that the industries of the State are busy and prosperous."

"I find that the demand for labor of all classes, but particularly for skilled labor in all of the trades is increasing rather than diminishing. The State statisticians report that there has been a greater production during the last year in proportion to the number of skilled laborers employed than has ever been recorded before. Our trade papers show that it is impossible to obtain the skilled labor required, and that our industries are drawing very heavily upon the skilled wage-earners of other States. Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island in the East; Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin in the West have contributed to New Jersey's ever increasing army of skilled laborers, and our industries are planning next year to make further requisitions, especially in New England where the skilled labor is of a class second only to that which has already made New Jersey a leader among the industrial States. New York has been drawn upon very heavily, but it cannot be depended upon to relieve the demand for more labor, for the reason that so many New York industries are coming to New Jersey, are bringing their operatives with them, and are enlarging their New Jersey plants so that they themselves are among those who are making the greatest demand for help. This is true in part of the West because a number of Western industries have come to New Jersey within the last six months and have begun the erection of plants of a much larger capacity than those which they operated West. These manufacturers report that the transportation facilities afforded by New Jersey are especially attractive to their workmen, enabling them to live at some distance from the factories where property is relatively cheap and living inexpensive.

"It seems that every plant that comes to New Jersey does so for the purpose of spreading out and greatly increasing or doubling its previous output."

Hospital Entertainment.

At the bi-monthly meeting of the Women's Board of Managers of the Homeopathic Hospital of Essex County, held December 6 in Bloomfield, it was decided to give a good old-fashioned Christmas to the nurses and employees of the hospital, and at the same time bring cheer to the sick. Mrs. A. Roney Peterson of Glen Ridge was appointed chairman, with a committee of five ladies to assist, namely, Mrs. Charles H. Shelton of Montclair, Miss E. Moseley, Miss Weeks, Mrs. MacLaury and Mrs. Brockett of East Orange. The entertainment was very successfully carried out. A large tree was erected and tastefully trimmed, and most useful and tasty articles were distributed to those in the employ of the hospital. The young ladies' auxiliary of Orange trimmed the house with ropes of evergreen, and gifts of flowers and fruit were received; also a plum pudding and mince meat, and the committee wish to publicly acknowledge with thanks to all those who contributed to the entertainment or sent gifts to the hospital for Christmas.

Bloomfield Mission.

TO THE PUBLIC:

An opportunity is afforded the Bloomfield Mission by the kindness of the editor of the CITIZEN to thank the friends of the mission for their support and their sympathy with this work during the year now closed. This opportunity is taken to thank these friends for their help in supporting this gospel mission and providing a place where the way-faring man may turn aside and hear the Gospel. During the past year a Gospel service has been maintained with the exception of August, when it was deemed best to close room, every Sunday night in the year. There has been an average attendance at these meetings of thirty-three persons. Many children come to the evening services and their close attention to the words of the speakers prove their interest. A Christian Endeavor Society has lately been organized and this promises to be of much benefit. The expenses of the year have been met by the friends of the cause. The workers feel assured that the faithful preaching and prayer have not been in vain and that many a heart has been strengthened to bear the burden and heat of the day; and who can tell save Him who doeth all things well how many souls have been saved.
